METRO BOSTONCOLUMBIA GAS BEING SUED
OVER N. ANDOVER DEATH

The family of a North Andover man who died following September's Merrimack Valley gas explosions is suing the gas company for wrongful death and negligence. Kenneth DeVeau's family says that the 57-year-old died due to the stress brought on by the evacuations due to the explosions that rocked Lawrence, North Andover and Andover on Sept. 13. DeVeau's family, who says he suffered from myotonic dystrophy, a weak heart, chronic neurological disorder and other illnesses, is being represented by Boston attorney Marc Break-stone. DeVeau's sister, Barbara Hubbard, who was her brother's caretaker, was watching the news back in September when she spotted rescue crews bringing her brother to Andover High School after he used his medical alert bracelet to call for help. Hubbard says she instructed her brother to be brought to the hospital. Hubbard was not able to get to her brother at the evacuation center, according to Breakstone, because the area was blocked off. The next day, Kenneth DeVeau suffered "a catastrophic heart attack," according to Breakstone. SARAH LUCOMA

UTAH MAYOR DEPLOYED TO AFGHANISTAN KILLED

The mayor of a Utah city was killed in the Afghan capital Kabul on Saturday in an apparent insider attack, the state's lieutenant governor said. The death of Brent Taylor, mayor of North Ogden and a member of the Utah National Guard, was confirmed by Utah Lt. Gov. Spencer Cox, who posted a tribute on Facebook. "I hate this," Cox wrote. "I'm struggling for words. I love Mayor Taylor, his amazing wife Jennie and his 7 sweet kids." Taylor had left his position in North Ogden, a city of around 17,000 people about 45 miles north of Salt Lake City, earlier this year to serve in Afghanistan. It was his fourth deployment, according to The Deseret News, a Utah newspaper. The NATO-led mission in Afghanistan said in a statement on Saturday that a U.S. armed forces member was killed but did not identify him. "Initial reports indicate the attacker was a member of the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces. Initial reports also indicate the attacker was immediately killed by other Afghan Forces," the mission said in a statement.

MIGRANT CARAVAN MAY ARRIVE IN COMING WEEKS

YOGA STUDIO GUNMAN
ACCUSED OF HARASSMENT

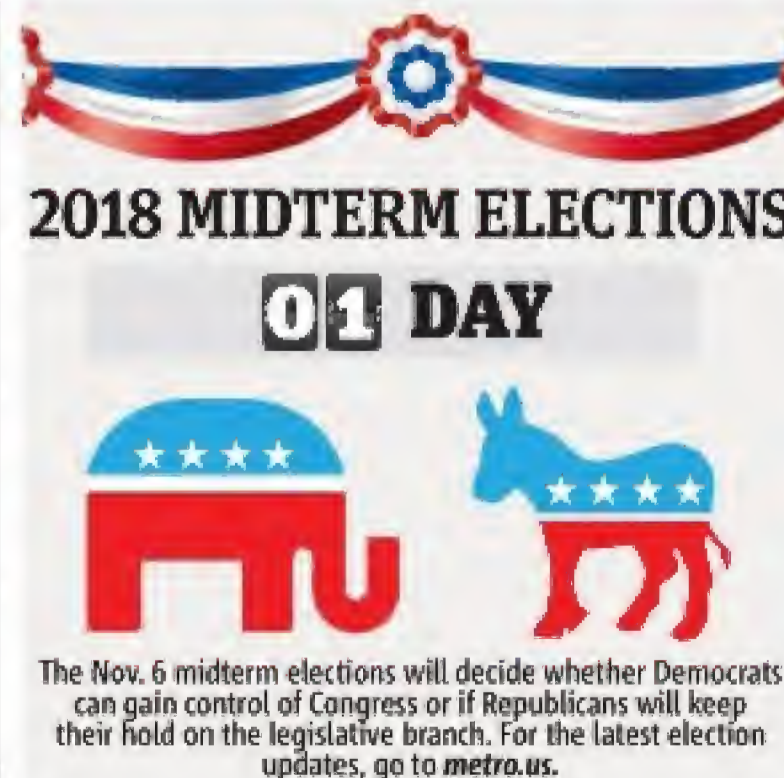

A gunman who killed two women at a Florida yoga studio and wounded five other people before taking his own life had previously been accused of harassing young women, police said on Saturday. Authorities said they do not know why Scott Beierle, 40, opened fire on Friday afternoon after posing as a customer to join the class at the Hot Yoga studio in Tallahassee. Detectives are searching for links between him and the victims. The two women who died were identified as a student and a faculty member from Florida State University. Police said Beierle was a graduate of FSU who served in the military, and that he had been the subject of calls to authorities in the Tallahassee area "related to harassment of young women." In a statement, police said Beierle was staying in a local hotel at the time of the attack, and that investigators were also searching his home in Deltona, Florida, more than 200 miles southeast of Tallahassee. Police records showed he was arrested in 2012 and 2016 on charges of grabbing women's buttocks. Both cases were dismissed, the Tallahassee Democrat newspaper reported.

ETHIOPIA'S DESISA
TAKES NYC MARATHON

Ethiopian Lelisa Desisa used a powerful surge to win his first New York City Marathon in five tries and Kenya's Mary Keitany claimed a fourth women's crown with a dominant victory on Sunday. Desisa finally made it to the top of the podium with a strong closing mile to win in an unofficial two hours, five minutes and 59 seconds as he and fellow Ethiopian Shura Kitata (2:06:01) passed defending champion Geoffrey Kamworor, who finished third in 2:06:26. "Today is my day. I am very, very happy," said Desisa, a two-time Boston Marathon winner who had finished second in New York in 2014 and third in 2015 and 2017. "I [was] thinking this year to be a champion," Desisa said. "I'm very thirsty to be the champion. I've been second. I've been third. This year I decided to be champion because I had the training." Kitata, 22, led much of the race before Kamworor moved in front of the Ethiopians around the 23rd mile. But his African challengers were not done with Desisa holding off Kitata in the final mile. Keitany, second to American Shalane Flanagan in 2017 after three New York victories, returned to the top with a runaway performance.

The 'El Chapo' saga is about to release a new season — in real life

The trial against drug lord Joaquín Guzmán Loera begins Monday in New York City.

If he was already famous for his escapes from jail and his interview with Sean Penn for Rolling Stone magazine, the Netflix series took the most mediatic drug trafficker of recent decades into icon status. Mexican Joaquín "El Chapo" Guzmán Loera will have his court appearance in the United States on Monday, after being extradited from Mexico in January 2017.

The trial is expected to last at least three months. Guzmán faces life in prison for 11 counts of drug trafficking, conspiracy and money laundering. (The death penalty is not a possibility due to extradition agreement).

Metro spoke with Angel Armando Rodríguez Luna, researcher at Colectivo de Análisis de la Seguridad con Democracia (CASEDE) and specialist in organized transnational crime, as well as in the security cooperation between Mexico and the United States.

What can we expect from the trial?

We can expect a show; some sort of security deployment is expected — particularly in New York — to safeguard the security of "El Chapo" in principle, and also some of the witnesses who will participate in this trial. Relevant information on the activities of the Sinaloa cartel, particularly on the faction that Guzmán led, is also expected to come out.

Could we learn names of politicians or characters linked to the activities of "El Chapo"?

We should learn them. It will depend a lot on the way in which Guzmán's teams of lawyers and protected witnesses carry out these proceedings within the court. We should expect important information for both the judicial and journalistic sides, with names that have participated — particularly, at least, these past two decades.

How long could the trial last?

Both Guzmán and his defense have stated that they are innocent, and in that sense, this can make the trial very long because it is going to seek to group and give solidity to all the testimonies that exist and that also account for Guzmán's different levels of guilt, both in drug trafficking and murders, committed inside and outside of Mexico.

It should be noted that this is a criminal group that has criminal operations in more than 50 countries around the world. It would be worthwhile to learn a little more, at least from the perspective of the Sinaloa cartel, about how transnational organized crime operates in other regions of the world and what the true articulation is of the networks and legal and illegal actors that make up such operational capacity.

'El Chapo' loses last-minute bid to postpone trial

A U.S. judge last week turned down a last-ditch effort by accused Mexican drug lord Joaquín "El Chapo" Guzmán to delay his trial, which is set to begin Monday with jury selection in Brooklyn federal court.

Lawyers for Guzmán said in a motion that they needed more time to review more than 14,000 pages of documents, largely related to key witnesses expected to testify against their client, that prosecutors turned over on Oct. 5.

However, U.S. District Judge Brian Cogan said at a hearing on Tuesday that the volume of documents was in line with what they should have expected.

Here's what you need to know about voting in Tuesday's midterms

Here's how to vote in the state and what you'll be voting for.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Are you ready for Election Day 2018? If you didn't vote early and aren't sending in an absentee ballot, you'll have to head to the polls on Tuesday to cast your vote in the midterms.

Eyes are on the midterms all across the country, and Massachusetts is expected to see a "strong and healthy" voter turnout, Secretary of State William Galvin said earlier in the month.

More than four million state residents are registered to vote, with 73,000 people registering in October alone. The last day to register to vote in

GETTY IMAGES

Massachusetts was Oct. 17 per state law, which requires registration at least 20 days before an election.

The Massachusetts ballot has three statewide ballot questions as well as some high-profile races:

Question 1: Patient-to-nurse limits.

Question 2: Campaign spending.

Question 3: Anti-transgender discrimination.

Governor: Incumbent Republican Charlie Baker is seeking a second term, going against Democratic challenger Jay Gonzalez. Republican Lt. Gov. Karyn Polito and Democrat Quentin Palfrey will appear on the ballot with the respective gubernatorial candidates.

U.S. Senate: Democrat Elizabeth Warren has had her Senate seat since 2013. She's facing two challengers: Republican Geoff Diehl and Independent Shiva Ayyadurai.

Attorney General: Democrat Maura Healey, who has been the state's AG since 2015, is being challenged by Republican Jay McMahon.

Secretary of State: Six-term Secretary of State Democrat William Galvin (Massachusetts does not pose term limits on secretaries of state, and Galvin has held the position since 1994) faces two challengers on Election Day, Republican Anthony Amore and Green-Rainbow candidate Juan Sanchez.

State Treasurer: Incumbent Democrat Deb Goldberg is going up against Green-Rainbow candidate Jamie Guerin and Republican Keiko Orrall.

State Auditor: Democrat Suzanne Bump, auditor since 2011, is facing three challengers, Republican Helen Brady, Libertarian Daniel Fishman and Green-Rainbow candidate Edward Stamas.

U.S. House of Representatives: All nine Massachusetts congressional districts have general elections for the 2018 midterms, though in four districts, Democrats are running unopposed.

One of those is Ayanna Pressley, for the 7th Congressional District, which covers parts of Boston, Cambridge and Milton, as well as Chelsea, Everett, Randolph and Somerville.

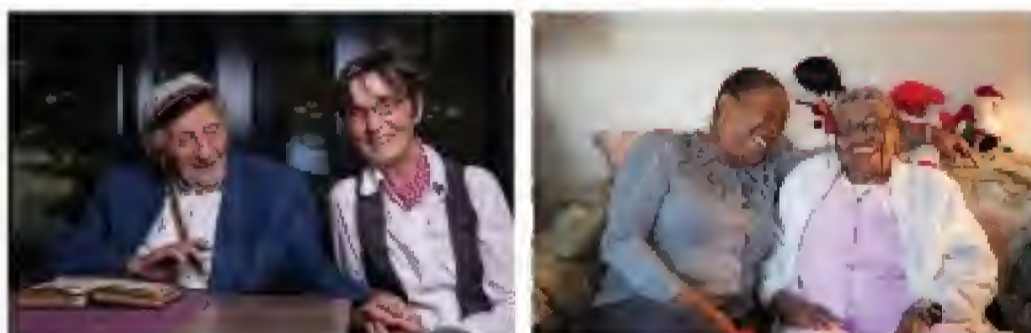

The Massachusetts 2nd District, in Central Massachusetts, is the most competitive House race, with incumbent Democrat Jim McGovern facing off against Republican Tracy Lovvorn.

How the Koch brothers inspired this 'House of Cards' character

Greg Kinnear explains how the billionaire brothers influenced his work on season 6.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Early in the final season of "House of Cards," which debuts today on Netflix, wealthy businessman Bill Shepherd (Greg Kinnear) has a very tense encounter with President Claire Underwood (Robin Wright) in the Oval Office. There's no need to spoil the confrontation here, of course, but of all the moments that define Bill throughout the series, this one stands out.

Then again, as Kinnear tells Metro, both Bill and his sister Annette Shepherd (Diane Lane) are completely "entitled, arrogant and formidable."

"I felt like they had a guy who is one of two parts," says Kinnear. "He and his sister are definitely married, in a way. I wouldn't call it a good cop/bad cop relationship, but the two of them together are quite effective at getting results. I think [showrunners Frank Pugliese and Melissa James Gibson] mentioned the Koch brothers or some of these other well-connected, financially well-to-do families that aren't really aren't elected to anything. They don't have a need to do anything, but through their connections and their money, they are able to express their willpower and change policy."

The Koch brothers comparison is apt. From the very beginning of season six, the pair is almost always working with one another against Claire's own presidential agenda, which leads to many showdowns, including the one in the Oval Office.

"That Koch brothers reference is a good one because you hear the word 'brothers' and immediately know there is a familial connection for them," the actor notes. "They're protective of that, and I think they need each other in a way. Yet, like all families, that can be a hard mechanism to keep working without it getting volatile."

"In fact, as it moves along," Kinnear adds

Greg Kinnear's Bill Shepherd takes a cue from the Koch brothers this season. DAVID GIESBRECHT/NETFLIX before stopping himself with a laugh. "I don't want to give anything away."

And he's totally right, for as exciting as it is to discuss the nitty-gritty details of the remaining twists and turns that "House of Cards" has in store for audiences, it's even more exciting to watch it for the first time.

This is especially true for Kinnear, who counts himself among the show's many fans.

"I remember watching the first episode and the first season and being kind of gob-smacked," he recalls. "Seeing the level of work in the aesthetic, in the design, in the writing, the acting and all of it was amazing. It had elevated the television experience to something that, as someone who had worked primarily in film, I didn't realize was possible. It was hard not to be taken with what they were doing on this show, and with how consistently good and interesting it was."

The sixth and final season of "House of Cards" is on Netflix.

Why Netflix took such a huge risk to finish Orson Welles' final film Producer Frank Marshall talks us through the 48-year journey.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"The Other Side of the Wind" would never have been finished without Netflix.

Orson Welles began filming it in 1970, but production repeatedly stalled, and he struggled for 15 years to get it finished. He died in 1985 without completing his Hollywood satire, which was semiautobiographical as it revolved around John Huston's exiled director returning to America to try and finish his comeback movie.

Because of Welles' genius, though, a devoted group of filmmakers and artists, which included Peter Bogdanovich and

It took a long time to finally finish "The Other Side of the Wind." JOSÉ MARIA CASELLI/NETFLIX

Frank Marshall, made it their mission to complete "The Other Side of the Wind." Marshall, who worked on the film as a novice back in 1970 as a production manager, recently told Metro he spent the past 33 years trying to get his hands on the negative for "The Other Side of the Wind" so he could finally finish it. However, that only really started to become a reality when Netflix got involved six years ago.

"Ted Sarandos, who is the chief content officer for Netflix, is a huge Orson fan. He knows how much of a visionary filmmaker he was," Marshall says. "Netflix is a great site for films and storytelling in all different kinds of ways. I think he understood the importance of this for cinema history and for Orson's career."

There was just one problem, though, as Marshall, "couldn't tell him what we needed to finish it, because we needed to see that negative.

"We couldn't get the negative before we had somebody who would pay for it," says Marshall. "It was a catch-22."

That didn't stop Netflix from putting its hands deep into its pockets for "The Other Side of the Wind."

"Finally, Ted said, 'Go for it,'" says Marshall. "They were supportive of anything we needed. There was never a question from them."

"I'll admit, we went over budget," he adds. "They never questioned what we were doing or why we were doing it. That's why we are here today."

Unfortunately, things only got more complicated once they had their hands on the negative.

"Essentially it was a big treasure hunt, a scavenger hunt even, that's a better way," says Marshall. "It was a giant puzzle. We had a script, we had Orson's notes, we had cut sequences, we had a lot of guide posts along the way."

"But we had to assemble all of the film and get it downloaded and organized first. Because I didn't know if he had shot everything," he adds. "There was no way to know. He never kept any logs, and notes were scattered all over the place. So we had to sit down and organize the film, and that took nearly a year."

But Marshall insists that the now-completed version is the perfect conclusion to Welles' career.

"It is nice to be the bookend to his career," says Marshall. "It is a fitting film for his legacy."

"The Other Side of the Wind" is now on Netflix.

On the next screen, you'll see a list of the federal student loans under your name. Click on the number of the loan in the left-most column to bring up details about it. You'll see the total amount left to repay and the name and website of the company that collects your bill.

Next, check your credit report for private student loans. You can access one report from each of the three major credit bureaus annually at annualcreditreport.com, or you can use a free online credit reporting service.

In the accounts section, student loans will likely be listed as installment loans. Take note of the company that owns the loan and the balance.

Step 2: Get control
Not sure how much you've been paying to each bank or servicer? Log in to their online portals to find out. While you're there, note the interest rate on your loans, too.

Make a list of loans that includes the company you pay, whether the loan is federal or private, the amount you owe per month, the amount you owe overall, and the interest rate. Rank the loans by interest rate, with the highest at the top.

Now, compare your total monthly payment with your take-home pay. Are you earning enough to cover not only your loans, but also the essentials like your housing costs and food? If the answer is "no" to either or both, cutting your loan bill is your priority now.

Step 3: Take action
Sign up for an income-driven repayment plan. For federal loans, this limits your loan bill to a percentage of your income.

Call your lender. Your ability to pay less toward private loans depends on individual lenders' policies. Ask for lower or interest-only payments for a period of time. Avoid extended forbearance. While postponing your payments might sound like a good idea, reserve this for short-term stints. If you can't afford your loans for the foreseeable future, choose a more permanent strategy.

If you have a month of expenses or more saved for emergencies and you're able to contribute up to the employer match on your 401(k), you can tear into those loans. Pay off the highest-interest loans first to save the most money. Or refinance, if you have good credit or a co-signer.

It's always dangerous to judge an NBA team before Thanksgiving, let alone less than a week after Halloween. But no doubt, the Celtics have underwhelmed so far this season.

The C's are 6-3 to start the NBA season, staring up at teams like the Raptors, Bucks and Pacers in the Eastern Conference standings. For a team that many predicted would finish with the best record in the entire NBA, three losses in three weeks is less than ideal.

The Celtics haven't really landed a signature win to start the season as you can poke holes in all of their victories. They beat the Sixers soundly on opening night at home. But they should beat the Sixers soundly on opening night at home.

A two-point win over the Knicks a few nights later?

Their win at Oklahoma City was solid, but the Thunder are just 4-4 to start the season and may not be as good as originally thought.

The "W" over the Bucks last Thursday was decent as well, as they handed Milwaukee its first loss of the season. But this is a game the Celtics should win as well. It should be expected. They're at home, first and foremost. And after Giannis Antetokounmpo, the Bucks don't have a player that would crack the Celtics' starting lineup. The Celtics also had to set a franchise record in 3-pointers made that night to beat the Bucks. Shots aren't going to fall like that each night (see Saturday night's 102-101 loss to the Pacers in Indiana, in which they shot 19-of-46 from the deep stripe).

The loss to the Pacers was troublesome in that the Celtics totally botched the last minute of the contest.

Kyrie Irving drilled a 3 with just 37.2 seconds left, giving the Celtics a four-point lead. But a bad foul by Jaylen Brown, porous defense by Irving on Victor Oladipo, and an ugly inbound pass by Gordon Hayward wound up losing the game for the C's down the stretch.

Celtics coach Brad Stevens has been preaching for weeks that the Celtics "aren't as good as everyone thinks" they are, and Danny Ainge was particularly hard on the team he assembled last week on the NBC Sports Boston broadcast during the Milwaukee game.

The Celtics are nearly last in the NBA in team scoring so far this season, averaging just 103.9 points per game (28th).

"We only have one basketball," Ainge told 98.5 The Sports Hub's Toucher and Rich. "And we have a lot of guys who are capable of scoring. They're just not going to be able to do it every night. Not everybody. And we're going to see two or three different guys [score big] each night. I'm not worried about that. When guys score six points in a game, that doesn't mean they played bad. It doesn't mean anything. It just means that they didn't get the opportunity that night. Now there's going to be times when guys go 2-for-15 from the field and score six points and that's different. But the opportunities are going to be coming to different guys each night and we have to accept that."

The Celtics are loaded for sure, but they still don't have that Alpha Dog on the offensive end that will lead them in scoring nine out of 10 nights. They still don't have a top 15 player in the NBA.

When Irving is at the peak of his powers, he creeps into that conversation. And Jayson Tatum looks like he will be in that convo very soon.

But right now, the Celtics' top 2 are not on the same level as a Kevin Durant and Steph Curry, or a Chris Paul and James Harden.

There are seven months ahead where these narratives could change with the Celtics. But in the early, early, early going, it's not looking great.
